THE MUSIC OF KING'S
CHORAL FAVOURITES FROM CAMBRIDGE

Stephen Cleobury

THE CHOIR OF KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

For more than half a millennium, King's College Chapel has been the home to one of the world's most loved and renowned choirs. Since its foundation in 1441 by the 19-year-old King Henry VI, choral services in the Chapel, sung by this choir, have been a fundamental part of life in the College. Through the centuries, people from across Cambridge, the UK and, more recently, the world have listened to the Choir at these services. Today, even people who aren't able to attend services in the Chapel have heard King's Choir, thanks to its many recordings and broadcasts, and the tours that have taken it to leading international concert venues around the world. Despite its deep roots in musical history, the Choir has always been at the forefront of technological innovation, and records exclusively on its 'impeccable' own label.

THE MUSIC OF KING'S

Claudio Monteverdi (1567-1643) Cantate Domino, SV 293 (1620)

Claudio Monteverdi spent the last thirty years of his life directing the music at the basilica of St Mark's, Venice, and keeping very much alive the splendid musical tradition made famous by the Gabrieli family a generation earlier. The six-part motet Cantate Domino is among those published by his pupil Giulio Cesare Bianchi of Cremona. The text conflates words from Psalms 95 and 96 and Monteverdi's music is appropriately dance-like and joyous from the start, but at the words 'Quia mirabilia fecit' ('he hath done marvellous things') the music becomes solemn, as if struck with awe. The composer replicates the sounds of angelic harps by creating a percussive effect with the 'ps' and 'ch' consonants in the text.

Samuel Scheidt (1587-1654) Puer natus in Bethlehem (1620)

As Kapellmeister at Halle, Scheidt worked under difficult conditions, which included the Thirty Years' War (which left him in post but without pay), disputes with the clergy (which resulted in his losing his position), and plague, which claimed the lives of his four surviving children. His music represented a new north German style resulting in large part from the effects of the Reformation, and standing in contrast to the Italian style of his contemporary, Monteverdi, whose Cantate Domino was published in the same year.

The text 'Puer natus in Bethlehem' forms the introit for the Eucharist on Christmas morning. The 13th-century melody would have been as well known to Scheidt's audience as other tunes such as In dulci jubilo and Resonet in laudibus, which have remained popular to this day. Here the text has been elaborated and the lightly buoyant setting by Scheidt conveys the joy of the birth of Christ.

Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (1525/6-1594) Magnificat primi toni a8 (c.1588)

Palestrina was the Italian master of polyphony par excellence. Quite as admired in his own day as he is now, his influence extended across Europe and his output includes at least 104 Masses. The eight-voice Magnificat primi toni was written for the papal choir in the late 1580s. The Sistine Chapel's layout precluded a physical separation of the choirs, as was possible, for example, in St Mark's, Venice, so here Palestrina employs different combinations of his eight voices to express different sections of the text. The music alternates between two equal choirs until the words 'Omnes generationes' ('All generations') at which point all eight voices are employed together. Then May's words 'Gloria facta nobis magna ex patris uero' ('For he that is mighty hath magnified me, I am sung by a quartet of the two treble lines, an alto and a tenor, drawn from both choirs, the two top lines emphatically echoing each other at the words 'et sanctum nomen' ('and holy is his name'). Then the six lower voices sing the words 'Et mirabilis est et a prodigiosa in... admirabilis est' ('And his mercy is on them that fear him...'). The remainder of the text is shared by the alternating choirs.

The Magnificat was added to the paper choir's repertoire over twenty years after the Council of Trent's injunction which decreed that 'the whole plan of singing in musical modes shall be constituted not to give empty ears to the hearer, but in such a way that the words may be clearly understood...'. The 'empty ears' clearly understood by the Council of Trent's fathers lie down to the device of heavenly harmonies, in the contemplation of the joys of the blessed. Palestrina took this injunction on board and here makes much use of homophony, enabling the text to be heard more clearly than in complex counterpoint.

Antonio Lotti (1667-1740)

Crucifixus all

Lotti's famous eight-part Crucifixus comes from a larger work, the Credo in F for choir and orchestra, which is itself part of a complete Mass setting. The manuscript of the Mass was discovered in Dresden, although it was probably originally composed in Venice, where Lotti spent all of his career apart from the two years (1717-1718) he spent in Dresden, where he wrote a number of operas. This excerpt from the Credo became popular in the 19th century after it was published in an 1838 collection of sacred music entitled Sammlung verschiedener Gesangstücke von Christoph Gottlob August Hermann für auf die neue Zeit ('Important Pieces from the Organ of Regular Harmony to Modern Times').

Giulio Fauri (1845-1914)

Requiem Requiem (1888)

Giulio Fauri wrote his much-loved Requiem three years after the loss of his father and one year after the loss of his mother. It is a completely original work, with many settings, and was written in the style of the 19th century. The Requiem is a very little work, hence or judgement. The word 'requiem' - 'rest' - is repeated again and again, as it is here in the Requiem, whereas the words 'Dies irae' are heard only once. Almost unconventional in terms of religious belief, even agnostics, Fauri put into his Requiem what he described as 'a very human feeling of faith in eternal rest'. He said that he saw death as a happy deliverance, an aspiring towards the joy that lies beyond, rather than as a painful experience.

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756-1791)
See various copies, 1919 (1919)

The summer and autumn of 1791 saw Constance Mozart taking the waters at Baden, to which she returned with the couple's son, Carl, the following summer. She was in poor health and in an advanced state of pregnancy. The local churchmaster, Anton Stadl, was a great admirer of Mozart, and helped out in practical ways, including finding a small apartment for Constance to live in. Mozart, in return, left Stadl music and helped out with the preparation of students, and in late May 1791 sent the churchmaster this letter on her work of genius setting the 16th-century hymn, See various copies, in time for it to be performed in the choir on the feast of Corpus Christi. The music is so beautiful that several weeks later, when her husband died in Vienna that December.

Clare Francis (1822-1895)
Psalm anglican (1872)

With Psalm anglican we stay with music appropriate to Corpus Christi Day, since the words are from the penultimate chapter of the medieval hymn Sermo Sacerdotis, written by St Thomas Aquinas specifically for the feast of Corpus Christi. Francis set these words as a duet in 1872 and interspersed his Psalm anglican as a communion anthem between the Sanctus and the Agnus Dei of the Mass a few years, which he had written twelve years earlier.

Robert Fery (1848-1916)
My soul, there is a country (1914)

Fery's lifelong love of the music of Bach, Mendelssohn and Brahms found expression at the very end of his life in his songs of Farewell. By the time he set himself to the task he was Principal of the Royal College of Music and his country was at war with Germany, a tragedy that he felt on a personal artistic level. As he said to his students at Christmas 1914:

I have been a quarter of a century and more a pro-fighter. I need too much to that music and their philosophers and authors to believe it possible that the music of my soul will be infused with the spirit of violence and national aggression!

Even as he spoke, many of his most brilliant students were leaving to serve with the British Army, and Fery was all too aware that prodigious talent would be needed on the battlefields of northern France. E. J. Moeran, Arthur Benjamin, Ian Gurney, George Butterworth, R. O. Morris, George Dyson, Arthur Bliss and Ralph Vaughan Williams were among those who joined up. By April 1915, Fery was so upset about news of deaths that he almost broke down as he once again addressed the RCM students.

Fery, like the many other composers of the period had taken leave of religion, found inspiration in the words of the King James Bible and in 17th century English literature, both of which he drew upon for his models. The first of the set, My soul, there is a country, is a setting of words by the Welsh metaphysical poet Henry Vaughan. Before Ferry completed the set he began to feel that the songs of 'Parson' would finally be his goodbye to the world, as in the words of his great nephew Oswald, a magnificent understatement: 'he spiritually unaffiliated himself to a world as formed and defined'. When the set was eventually performed it was at a national concert for the composer in Oxford in 1999.

Psalm 23 (The Lord is my shepherd)

Psalm 138 (Out of the deep)

Psalm 121 (I will lift up mine eyes)

Every experience of the music is deeply impressed within the Psalter. These three psalms, with others, find expression in these 100 sacred songs or poems. All who have passed through Kings' Choir or indeed, any cathedral or collegiate choir that has a daily tradition of choral Evensong and morning prayer will find in the Book of Common Prayer (and therefore in Coward's Psalter) well over many of these beautiful words embedded in their memories for life.

The three psalms chosen for this set are particularly fine and well known. The 23rd Psalm, The Lord is my shepherd is the great psalm of consolation, the words of which are familiar from its various traditional settings as a hymn; the penitential Psalm 138, Out of the deep (Dr. Bevan's) is a cry to God of one in the deepest anguish of despair (Psalm 121, I will lift up mine eyes, is a 'song of ascent', sung originally by pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem, the hills being the mountains of Judaea, and has powerful resonances for travellers and those who find inspiration in the landscape around them. David Livingstone used the psalm with his family on the deck of a boat before he departed for Africa.)

Lancelot Sibelius (1865-1957)

The Lord is my shepherd (Op. 61, No. 9 (1916))

Lancelot Sibelius is among the many composers from South to Scotland who have set the 23rd Psalm to music. His version for solo voice and piano was written in 1916 for the 500th anniversary of the founding of Westminster Cathedral and is a fine example of the 'English' style of Sibelius, who throughout his career was a great commissioner both of music and of works of art.

Oslo Spille (c. 1970)

100 verses (2000)

The first piece Oslo Spille encountered in his school choir in Norway was Maurice Strakosky's 1961 setting of 100 verses, which made a lasting impression – as he put it, 'the perfect cappella piece'. Like Strakosky, Spille is strongly influenced by planning, although, as he explains, while Strakosky used an existing traditional chant... I used chant more as a general inspiration, while also achieving the form and dynamic range of his incomparable setting of the text.

Frank Martin (1890-1974)

Agnes Dei (Mass for Double Choir) (1933)

Whose composer such as Faust and Porgy set lightly to institutional religion, Frank Martin, the son of a Catholic mother in Geneva, felt differently. "In my mind," he wrote, "when dealing with a religious work of art, everything ... ought to be subordinated to the inner compulsion to express one's faith convincingly." For Martin, the composer's own genius is itself detached from a religious composition. That Martin's music is not better known even today is due to his intense inner-critical self-wisdom. The first two movements of the Mass for Double Choir were completed in 1932, the Agnes Dei being written in 1933. But Martin did not allow the work to be performed until 1952, explaining, "I felt that a matter between God and myself ... I felt that a personal expression of religious belief should remain secret and hidden from public opinion."

Markus Lamberini (b. 1943)

O Magnum Mysterium (1984)

Markus Lamberini's O Magnum Mysterium was commissioned by the Los Angeles Master Chorale and overnight launched its composer's career. At its premiere the music director Paul Sabathumovich told his audience "Until now, Vittoria's O Magnum Mysterium has been the most beautiful and well-recognized setting of the text. I predict that will change after tonight." The popularity of the piece in the US is in no small way due to its many performances at Carols from Kings, the annual televised service broadcast by the BBC.

Stephen Paulus (1948-2014)

The Road Home (2007)

The Road Home was written in response to a commission from the Duke University Singers who specifically asked for a short fall-type choral arrangement. The simple performance here that Paulus found was published originally in The Southern Harmony Songbook of 1833 under the name "The Lone Wild Bird." Paulus commissioned new words from the poet Michael Dennis Brown, whose text compares up the universal theme of home. The Road Home is the only choral setting to get to have written a text that is as good as new from Stephen Cleobury for The Festival of Nine Lessons and Carols at Kings (1998). Just in 1998.

Arming Ones

Arming Ones was first published in 1776 with words by the Englishman John Newton (1729-1807). His back story was a remarkable one: a prison sailor in the Royal Navy, a deserter, and subsequently a sailor on board a slave. His writing career began with the obscure poems he wrote about the captain for the crew to sing (the captain thought him the most profane man he had ever encountered). During a near encounter with death during a storm at sea, he offered the words

Lord knew many signs of it. Having survived, he underwent a conversion. He continued in the slow trade (which he never changed his views) and eventually turned to a career as lord. The Archbishop of York refused to ordain him, but the Bishop of Lincoln took an interest and Newton was appointed Curate of Olney, where he befriended the poet William Cowper. Together they started to write hymns, including Amazing Grace, which they eventually published as Olney Hymns in 1779. Amazing Grace remained an obscure hymn in England, but became popular in the United States during the Protestant revival of the early 19th century. It was sung to many different tunes until 1831, when it was set to the now familiar tune named "New Britain".

Chinese tradition an English Chorus (c. 1840) He is like (The Jasmine Flower Song)

The popular Chinese folk song He is like (Jasmine Flower Song) dates back to the Qing Dynasty in the 17th century. It has been associated with the custom in the southern Yangtze delta of giving Jasmine flowers. As is typically the case with Chinese music, it uses the pentatonic (five-note) scale.

This has long been the most recognized Chinese song throughout the world. In his book, Travels in China of 1814, the British diplomat Sir John Barrow described it as one of the most popular songs in China. In 1826, Puccini used it in Turandot, and more recently it has been sung at many occasions, including the Beijing Olympics in 2008, and, more controversially, played on protesters' mobile phones during the 2009 pro-democracy protests in China, known as the Jasmine Revolution, which resulted in the song being banned in China.

American Folk Song, an James 84 (1838-1840) Shenandoah

The American folk song "Oh Shenandoah" or "Swing the Wide Missouri" dates from the early 19th century, when it was sung by Canadian and American fur traders who navigated the Missouri River in canoes. In the words of Shenandoah, I

There is a possible association with Shenandoah in 1810, the long-held chief of the Confederacy of upstate New York, who is sometimes called "Shenandoah". The song also has an association with the sea, spread internationally as sailors moved between coasts, and by the 1870s it was being included in books of sea shanties. In 1892 the Englishman Alfred Mason Williams included it in his Studies in Folk Song and Popular Song as "a good specimen of a bowdler chant".

CONDUCTOR'S NOTES

The pieces we have chosen for this album reflect something, though not all, of the breadth of the Choir's repertoire. That they should be chiefly liturgical is natural, since the Choir's main work consists of singing at the daily Mass here in Rome. The new arrangements of the Mass which has grown out of the choir's work here have the singing of the Mass and canticles in Latin, with the English text being found here only when special Masses are sung. This enables us to look to the continent of Europe to add to the great inherited tradition of British music. We have also included some of our more rare occasions, the non-liturgical and secular repertoire, here represented by American and Chinese items.

We begin with Monteverdi, a favourite composer of mine ever since a childhood meeting with the 16th singers. We recently found this great work in France. Happily there with a number of shorter motets which can be sung at evening, of which Cantata Domini is a sparkling example. We stay with 'early music' in the opening group, taking in Christmas and the Passion as well as the song of the virgin Mary, the latter apt because of the Choir's dedication to the Blessed Virgin.

Three of the best loved pieces of church music take us, through Mozart, to the 19th century, and the second group concludes, appropriately enough, in the year 20th, with one of Pany's songs of Passion, written a hundred years ago, towards the end of World War I.

We then spend some time with the psalms sung to Anglican chants. Not only are these great works of poetry, especially for Anglicans accustomed to Cowden's superb translation, but, at the centre of the daily office of Evening, they also afford to the Choir great opportunities to have with its ensemble organ, lute and cello, which support much else of what is sung here.

Our next group begins with the non-liturgical group, and includes a number of more modern pieces, which have grown out of the choir's work here. Perhaps best known to our friends in England is the Travis with which open and close the piece, while Heaven's Gate for Double Choir gives us in the Agnus Dei music whose solemnity at the start and fresh drive as it deepens into the text, and which rises to a shattering climax at the central point. Lauridsen's Christmas piece has found great popularity in various guises; I have even conducted a version for brass bands, and like the 19th piece with its unworldly shades of Carols, is more in the 'romantic' idiom. I have found, also with Corvick and others, that this style is best served by taking careful notice of how repeated material is subtly varied in tempo and dynamic.

In the final group I have myself made arrangements of two of the items, something I greatly enjoy doing.

STEPHEN CLEOBURY

Conductor

Stephen Cleobury has for over 35 years been associated with one of the world's most famous choirs, that of King's College, Cambridge. His work at King's has brought him into fruitful relationships with many leading orchestras and soloists, among them the Philharmonia Orchestra, the AAM, Britten Sinfonia, the OAE, and the BBC Concert Orchestra. He complements and refreshes his work in Cambridge through the many other musical activities in which he engages throughout the world.

At King's, he has sought to enhance the reputation of the world-famous Choir, broadening considerably the daily service repertoire, commissioning new music from leading composers and developing its activities in broadcasting, recording and touring. He introduced the highly successful annual festival, Easter at King's, from which the BBC regularly broadcasts, and, in its wake, a series of high-profile performances throughout the year, Concerts at King's.

From 1995 to 2007 he was Chief Conductor of the BBC Singers and since then has been Conductor Laureate. Since 1983 he has been closely involved in the Cambridge University Musical Society, one of the UK's oldest music societies, where he has nurtured generations of young talent. He retired from CUMS in 2016, becoming Conductor Laureate.

Beyond Cambridge he continues to be in demand as a conductor, organist, adjudicator and leader of choral workshops. Until 2008 he was a member of the Royal College of Organists, of which he is a past President. He has been Warden of the Solo Performers' section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians and President of the Incorporated Association of Organists; he is currently Chairman of the IAO Benevolent Fund, which seeks to support organists and church musicians in need. He is President of the Friends of Cathedral Music and of the Herbert Howells Society. He was appointed CBE in the 2009 Queen's Birthday Honours. King's College announced in 2018 that Stephen would retire in September 2019 after 37 years in post.

THE CHOIR OF KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

King's College was founded in 1441 with six 'singing men' and 16 choristers, who were to be poor boys 'of a strong constitution and an honest conversation'. Five centuries later, the Choir comprises 16 boys (Choristers) and 16 men (Choral and Organ Scholars).

The boys, aged between nine and thirteen, are educated across the river at King's College School, a thriving and famously happy school now comprising some 420 girls and boys. The Choristers are selected at audition based on musical potential and, of course, a love of singing. When they join, they spend up to two years in training as 'probationers', after which they join the full Choir.

The men are all undergraduates at the University, who have attained the necessary academic requirements to become undergraduates at Cambridge. Known either as Choral or Organ Scholars, they study many different academic subjects, from music to modern languages to natural sciences. Find out more by searching "King's College Choir".
